rison would testify even if I saked her to do so."

This was the reply of H. H. Rogers, the great Standard Oil magnate, in reply to an expressed desire on the part of the Court in the Boston Gas finquiry that Miss Harrison, Mr. Rogers's private secretary, should appear and tell what she knew concerning the $10,000 which was said to have been entered in her lame, and to have been entered in her lame, and to have been subsequently frawn against by T. W. Lawson's private secretary.

koman, as evinced by the attitude and syident wholesome respect of her employer, occasioned much admiring comment, not only on the part of the Court, but of the world at large.

Here is a recognized power behind a representative of one of the greatest business organizations of the world—a power whose authority is unquestioned and whose word is final.

Who is Miss Harrison?

"Who is Miss Harrison?" is a question heard frequently in business circles. Answer—a sphinx: A woman who keeps her own counsel. One who attends exclusively to her employer's interests, and who permits not the slightest divergence from them. A woman who can hold her tongue, and who, on account of this rare characteristic, as well as her unusual executive ability, is paid a salary considered princely even among hor men contemporaries. Among those in a position to know the lowest estimate of Miss Harrison's salary is $10,000, and there is every probability that the real sum far exceeds this figure.

A peculiar characteristic of this notable woman is that she has succeeded to a marvelous degree in sinking her personality entirely in that of the acurate and remarkable business automate. The Standard Oil Company is represented by the remaining her personality entirely in that of the acurate and remarkable business automate. Truly—a sphinx.

Miss Kathrine I. Harrison dendered are of excellent material and irreproachable make, but under the color and style. Miss Katherine I. Harrison has been Mr. Rogers's private secretary for many years, but beyond that fact and some knowledge of the business affairs which have passed through her hands, not a glimpse of the woman behind the mask has been obtained. She lives at No. 1345 Dean street, Brooklyn.

She Answers Callers.

The visitor having business with H. H. Rogers at his office, No. 28 Broadway, is requested to send in his card with a statement as to the nature of his business.

If this business is deemed of sufficient

If this business is deemed or sunicient importance to merit attention, your request is answered by the appearance from an inner office of an exceedingly tall and slender woman apparently about thirty years old. Her hair is blond in color, her eyes dark-gray and wonderfully clear, her complexion light. This is Katherine I. Harrison, private secretary.
